From the CEO

As we spring into March, we welcome the arrival of rare superblooms in Death Valley and the celebration of Women's History Month, a time to honor the remarkable contributions of women throughout history and in our communities. This month offers a wonderful opportunity to reflect on the strong, inspiring women who have made significant impacts on our lives.

Women have played crucial roles in shaping social change and advocating for those in need. Figures like Clara Barton, who founded the American Red Cross, Jane Addams, the pioneer of Social Work, and Michelle Nunn, CEO of Feeding America, exemplify the power of women in the non-profit world. Their dedication reminds us of the profound difference one person can make.

In our own community, we are fortunate to have numerous strong women leaders who work tirelessly to support and uplift others, creating pathways to hope and opportunity.

March is also a time for renewal and growth. As we embrace the changes that spring brings, let's remember the importance of nurturing each other and our community. This is the perfect time to encourage one another, reach out to those who may need a helping hand, and spread kindness throughout our neighborhoods.

At NyECC, we are committed to addressing the challenges faced by our community members. Your continued support enables us to provide essential resources, programs, and initiatives that empower individuals and strengthen families.

Thank you for your continued commitment to our mission. Let's continue to work together to honor the legacy of women who have paved the way, making a lasting difference in the lives of those we serve as we move forward into this vibrant and hopeful season.

Wishing you a wonderful and inspiring March

Understanding Phase II Environmental Site Assessments

Turning Unknown Risks into Known Facts

A Phase II Environmental Site Assessment (ESA) is typically recommended after a Phase I ESA identifies potential environmental concerns, known as a Recognized Environmental Conditions (RECs). While a Phase I ESA relies on records reviews and site observations, a Phase II ESA goes a step further by collecting and analyzing samples to determine if contamination or hazardous building materials are actually present.

Phase II ESAs may include sampling of soil, groundwater, and/or building materials. These help identify the type, location and extent of contamination and determine whether contaminant levels exceed state or federal regulatory thresholds and may require additional action.

Properties that commonly require a Phase II ESA include former gas stations or dry cleaners, industrial or manufacturing sites, properties with Leaking Underground Storage Tanks (LUSTs) or Aboveground Storage Tanks (ASTs), and sites with evidence of past or current spills, staining, or strong chemical odors.

Why Phase II ESAs are Important

Phase II ESAs protect property owners, buyers, lenders, and communities from any unexpected cleanup obligations early in the process. The data collected provides a reliable basis for informed decision-making related to redevelopment, financing, and long-term site use. Although Phase II ESAs are typically more time-consuming and costly than Phase I ESAs, they can help prevent unexpected expenses and delays later in a project.

Pesticides

How Phase II ESAs Work

Soil and groundwater sampling during a Phase II ESA helps identify where contamination may have originated, and how it could move through the soil and/or groundwater. Sampling locations are selected using professional judgement, historical site use, and findings from the Phase I ESA to ensure the most useful and representative data are collected.

Common laboratory analyses may include:

- petroleum hydrocarbons (e.g., gasoline, diesel)
- volatile organic compounds and semi-volatile organic compounds,
- heavy metals
- pesticides

Samples are analyzed using Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)-approved methods. The results are then documented in a Phase II ESA report that summarizes the work performed, presents the findings and provides recommendations for any additional investigation or next steps.

Nevada has established reporting and cleanup thresholds, and an environmental consultant can help interpret results and guide property owners through any required reporting or response actions. By turning unknown risks into known facts, Phase II ESAs help ensure properties can be safely reused and transformed into valuable community assets.
